

In the part of an intensive survey over all 18 topics divided by the three structural categories, this study found out the big progress of works having done upon the topics related to the super structure of the Thai state and government. Together with remarkable numbers of works, somehow, the old conception of the Thai monocratic state have been lengthened and complicatedly modified with the very little challenge from the new perception of Thai pluralist state.

The historical studies of the intermediate and the lower structure of the Thai state and government have slowly developed. As we can see from the appendices, there are very small number of works, limitation of foreign scholars involving in such fields, and the majority of work by Thai researchers showing the traditionalist style of studies. Such mentioned remarks could clearly observe in details from the weak and scarce lists of works on the subject of formal local government, police, political parties, parliamentary system, electionsystem, legal system, Thai political culture and political thoughts at the intermediate and lower levels. Meanwhile, the strong and large lists with the systematic knowledge on the topic of Thai state in general, Thai monarchy, Thai government, Thai bureaucracy, Thai military, interest groups as well as foreign policy are prominent.

Last but not least, the holistic picture of the Thai state and government needs an endeavour to portray, particularly the constructing synthesis of knowledge of the higher structure with the intermediate and the lower levels of government. This might be the hard, arduous, perhaps, end-less burden to the capable researchers upon the topic of the state and government of Thailand in the coming future.
